Capturing moments that make people care about your club.

WHAT WE'LL COVER TODAY

Two things: strategy, then tactics.

There are a hundred things you could learn about content. Today we're giving you the twenty percent that gets you eighty percent of the results.

01

Strategy

How to think about what you're capturing — what story, for which person, with what feeling.

02

Tactics

How to actually capture it — lighting, audio, framing, and the small habits that separate amateur from pro.

We've spent our careers figuring out what makes people care.

Producers, marketers, and storytellers. We've built audiences for brands you've heard of — and one of TikTok's largest accounts on the psychology of attention along the way.

WHY THIS MATTERS

You're doing amazing work. Midland & Odessa just needs to see it.

- Parents want to see what their kids actually do here every afternoon
- Donors want to see the transformations their dollars are funding
- The wider community still doesn't know what BGC really is

WHY YOU

You are the camera crew now.

There is no professional film team on retainer. There can't be one in every club, on every field trip, in every gym. But you're already there. You see the moments worth telling. The skills in this room are what move BGC from invisible to unmissable.

STRATEGY 01

Why does anyone watch anything on social?

Three reasons. That's it.

01

Entertaining

Funny, surprising, satisfying.
Makes them feel something pleasant in five seconds.

02

Educational

They learned something they didn't know. Useful, novel, "huh,
I didn't know that."

03

Inspirational

It moved them. Made them want to be better, do better, give more, try harder.

THE OVERLAP

The best posts hit two or three at once.

You already know this. Last time you stopped scrolling — why?

— TONIGHT: PAY ATTENTION TO YOUR OWN THUMB.

EXAMPLE · A TYPICAL POST

"We had a great day at the club!"

Five smiling faces. Standing in front of a logo wall. Caption: "So much fun today!" It feels like a press release for an event nobody's heard of. Not entertaining. Not educational. Not particularly inspirational. The thumb keeps scrolling.

EXAMPLE · A POST THAT LANDS

A girl, mid-thought, beads in her hair, in a room you can't quite see. Caption: "This is Maya. She's eleven. After school, she comes here and reads to the kindergarten class — because she remembers what it felt like to need someone to sit with."

That's a story. A donor cares. A parent cares. A volunteer signs up.

If you didn't know this kid — would you stop scrolling?

STRATEGY 02 · BEFORE YOU PRESS RECORD

Two questions, every time.

01

Who is this for?

A working mom. A donor. A teenager. A volunteer. Pick one — content built for everyone reaches no one.

02

Did this moment just make me feel something?

Surprise, laughter, pride, lump-in-throat. That feeling is the signal. Train the instinct — when you notice it, the phone comes out automatically. If it moved you, it'll move someone else.

STRATEGY 03 · SPOT THE STORY

Four signals to stay alert for.

01

A first

First basket. First cooked meal. First day.
First time speaking up. Firsts carry emotion automatically.

02

A surprise

The shy kid leading. The athlete tutoring.
Anything that breaks the assumption.

03

A contrast

An eight-year-old explaining code. A teen reading to kindergarteners. The opposite of what someone expects from "kids' club."

04

A real relationship

Visible trust between a kid and a staff member. You can't fake it. You can absolutely capture it.

If everyone is staring at the camera and smiling, you've made a yearbook photo, not a story. Yearbook photos belong in yearbooks. Real moments — kids mid-laugh, mid-concentration, mid-handshake — those belong on social.

TACTICS 02

Get in close. Tighter than feels comfortable.

Look at any YouTube thumbnail that gets clicked — almost every one is an expressive close-up of a face. The brain reads emotion fastest from faces. Eyes. Mouth. Reaction. The wider you shoot, the harder your viewer has to work to find the story. Get in. Crop in. Fill the frame.

TACTICS 03

Shoot vertical.

TikTok, Reels, Stories, Shorts — every platform that matters lives in 9:16. Horizontal video posted to vertical platforms gets cropped, ignored, or stuffed into a tiny postage stamp. The only exception is YouTube proper — the long-form, full-screen kind. Everywhere else, turn the phone.

TACTICS 03

Lighting in thirty seconds.

- Light should be on the face, not behind it. If the brightest thing in the frame is the window, your subject becomes a silhouette.

- Shade beats harsh sun. Outdoor at noon? Find a tree, a doorway, a covered porch. Even light, no squint.

- Indoors, face the window. Free, flattering, professional-looking light. The window is your softbox.

- If the room is dark, find a different room. Phones hate darkness — the footage gets grainy and muddy. Move.

TACTICS 04

Audio is the biggest difference between amateur and pro.

- Get close to your subject. Phone mic at arm's length picks up everything; phone mic at three feet picks up the room.

- Find a quiet spot. If you can hear the AC vent or a basketball bouncing, your viewer will too. Step into a hallway.

- Wait for the noise to pass. Whistle, plane, slammed door — pause five seconds, then go again. Free fix.

- Capture the room. Ten seconds of background sound — kids laughing, ball bouncing — makes any edit feel alive.

TACTICS 05 · TESTIMONIALS

The mug shot vs. the conversation.

THE MUG SHOT

Standing. Back to a wall.
Arms at the sides.

Bare wall behind. Subject visibly nervous, posture straight, no context, no setting. Reads as: forced, official, defensive. Works for the DMV. Doesn't work on Instagram.

THE CONVERSATION

Seated. Comfortable.
Talking across from you.

Like two people in a coffee shop. Soft setting in the background — books, a window, a wall of art — that says real place, real life. Subject relaxes, talks like a person, not a press release.

TACTICS 06 · TESTIMONIALS, PART 2

Let them tell. Then show what they're describing.

A talking-head video by itself is a podcast on screen. The same testimonial, intercut with footage of the actual thing they're talking about, becomes a story.

- Parent says "my daughter is reading two grade levels above where she was last year" → cut to her reading.

- Coach says "this team didn't know each other in September" → cut to a high-five, a huddle, a celebration.

- Volunteer says "I come here twice a week" → cut to her walking in the door, hugging a kid.

Capture more than you think you need.

RECAP

Everything you need, on one card.

STEP 01 · STRATEGY

Why are you posting this?

Entertaining, educational, or inspirational

Who is this for?

What's the one thumb-stopping moment?

STEP 02 · TACTICS

How do you capture it?

Get in close — tighter than feels comfortable

Shoot vertical (almost) always

Light on the face, not behind

Get close for audio

Capture more than you need

STEP 03 · THE TWO FILTERS

Before you post.

If I didn't know this kid, would I stop scrolling?

Would I stop scrolling — period?

BEFORE YOU POST • 3 QUICK CHECKS

Three things to do after you've captured.

01

Trim the boring parts.

The first two seconds matter most. Cut the wind-up, start on the strongest moment.

02

Add captions.

Most people watch with the sound off. No captions = no story.

03

One CTA per post.

Sign up. Share. Donate. Tag a friend. Pick one — don't ask for everything at once.

YOUR HOMEWORK

Three moments. One week.

- Capture three moments this week using the four signals — a first, a surprise, a contrast, or a real relationship.

- Save three posts that stop your thumb. Ask yourself: was it entertaining, educational, inspirational — or all three?

- Post one of your three moments. Vertical. Captions. Strongest two seconds first. See what happens.

THE BIGGER PICTURE

These skills don't stay at the club.

Everything you learned today works at your kid's birthday party, your own business, your church newsletter, your family. You're not just a BGC staffer with a phone anymore. You're a storyteller.

Now — questions?
