Stop the scroll.

Capturing moments that make people care about your club.

WHAT WE'LL COVER TODAY

Two things: strategy, then tactics.

There are a hundred things you could learn about content. Today we're giving you the twenty percent that gets you eighty percent of the results.

01

Strategy

How to think about what you're capturing — what story, for which person, with what feeling.

02

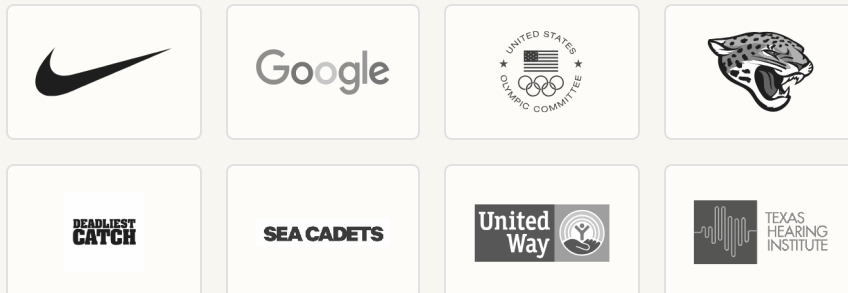

Tactics

How to actually capture it — lighting, audio, framing, and the small habits that separate amateur from pro.

We've spent our careers figuring out what makes people care.

Producers, marketers, and storytellers. We've built audiences for brands you've heard of — and one of TikTok's largest accounts on the psychology of attention along the way.

WHY THIS MATTERS

You're doing amazing work. Midland & Odessa just needs to see it.

- Parents want to see what their kids actually do here every afternoon
- Donors want to see the transformations their dollars are funding
- The wider community still doesn't know what BGC really is

WHY YOU

You are the camera crew now.

You're already there. You see the moments worth telling. The skills in this room are what move BGC from invisible to unmissable.

STRATEGY 01

Why does anyone watch anything on social?

Three primary reasons:

01

Entertaining

Funny, surprising, satisfying.
Makes them feel something pleasant in five seconds.

02

Educational

They learned something they didn't know. Useful, novel, "huh,
I didn't know that."

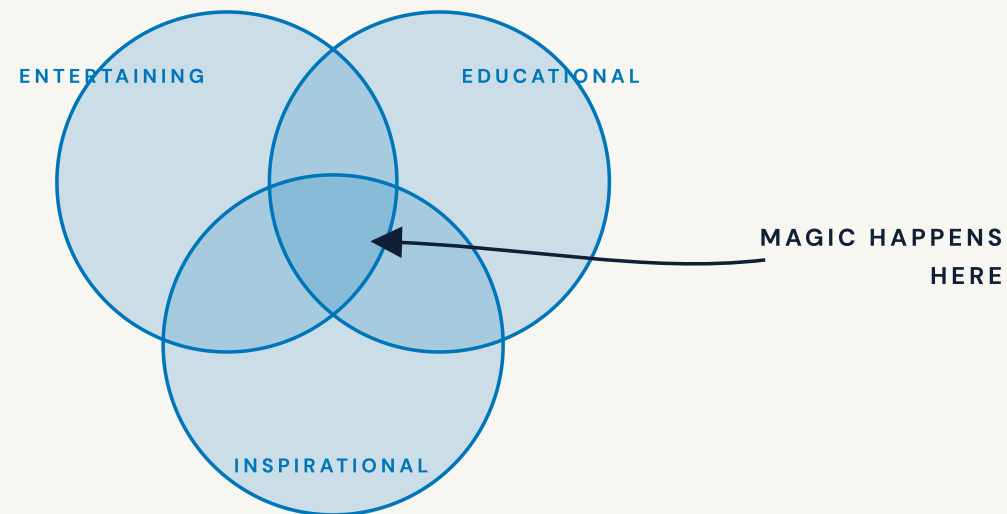

03

Inspirational

It moved them. Made them want to be better, do better, give more, try harder.

THE OVERLAP

The best posts hit two or three at once.

The next time you scroll social media, pay attention to what stops your scroll.

— START TONIGHT.

STRATEGY 02 · HOOKS

Earn the next three seconds.

If the first 1–3 seconds don't grab them, the rest doesn't matter. Four ways to land it:

VISUAL

Something interesting happening in the frame.

The eye stops because something is moving in a way it didn't expect.

- Open mid-action
- Quick cuts in the first 2 seconds
- An unexpected angle

CURIOSITY

Open a loop in their head and don't close it right away. The brain stays for the answer.

- Tease a number — "3 things you didn't know about..."
- Set up stakes — "She'd never picked up a ball until this week."
- Pay it off at the end, not the start

STATEMENT

Just say what's happening, plainly, in the first second. Sets the expectation. The right viewer stays.

- "Today we're doing free-throw practice."
- "This is what an after-school tutoring session looks like."
- Cut to the action immediately

QUESTION

Pose a question directly to the viewer, like you're talking one-on-one. Pulls them into the answer.

- "Have you ever heard of...?"
- "Did you know that...?"
- Don't answer until you've shown them why they should care

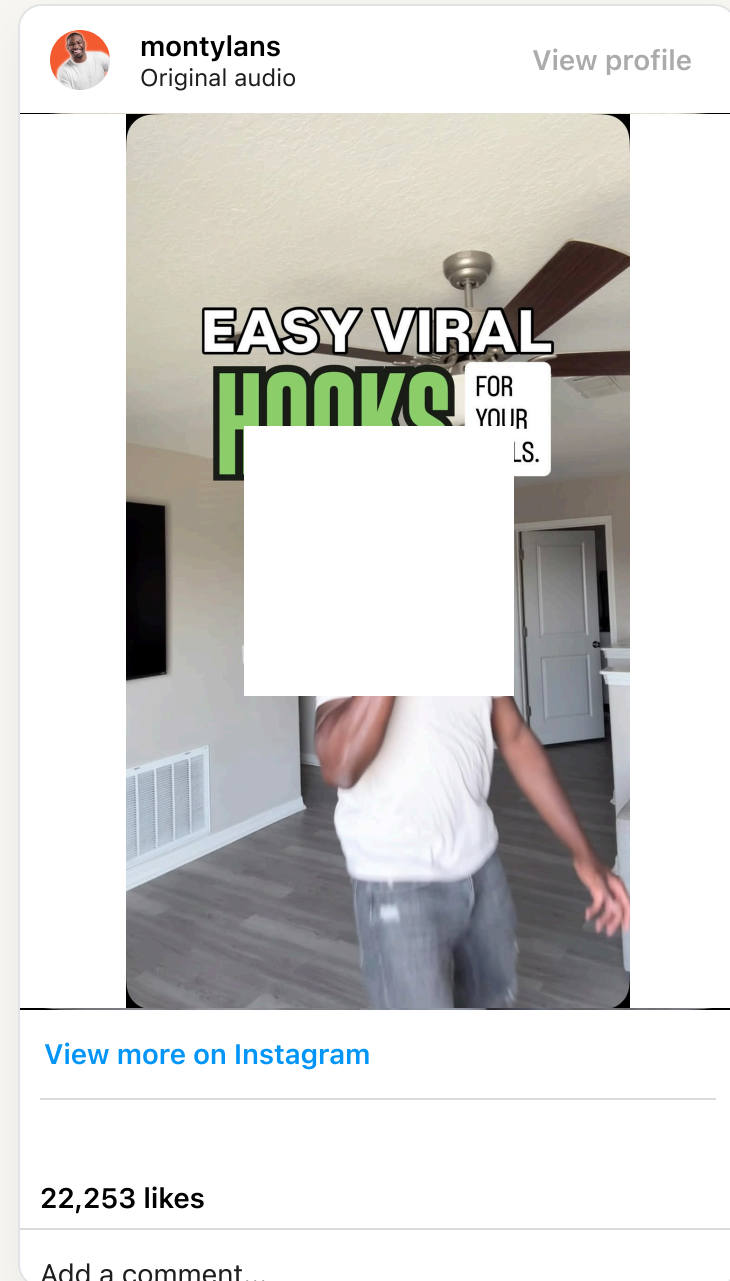

Two examples on the next slide ↓

Here's what they look like in the wild.

VISUAL HOOK

CURIOSITY HOOK

The question to ask yourself is this...

If you didn't know this kid — would you stop scrolling?

STRATEGY 03 • THE REFLEX

See it coming.

The best moments don't announce themselves. They build, they peak, they dissolve — in seconds. If you wait until one is fully happening before you raise the camera, half of it is already gone. The job is to feel them coming.

01A reflex, not a checklist.

You learn to sense the setup — the lean-in, the laugh starting, the first bite — and the phone comes up in the same beat.

02A muscle, not a rule.

You'll miss most of them at first. Then one day you'll find yourself recording before you've thought about why. That's when it's wired.

STRATEGY 04 • SPOT THE STORY

Four signals to stay alert for.

01

A first

First basket. First cooked meal. First day.
First time speaking up. Firsts carry emotion automatically.

02

A surprise

The shy kid leading. The athlete tutoring.
Anything that breaks the assumption.

03

A contrast

An eight-year-old explaining code. A teen reading to kindergarteners. The opposite of what someone expects from "kids' club."

04

A real relationship

Visible trust between a kid and a staff member. You can't fake it. You can absolutely capture it.

If everyone is staring at the camera and smiling, you've made a yearbook photo, not a story. Yearbook photos belong in yearbooks. Real moments — kids mid-laugh, mid-concentration, mid-handshake — those belong on social.

TACTICS 02

Get in close. Tighter than feels comfortable.

Look at any YouTube thumbnail that gets clicked — almost every one is an expressive close-up of a face. The brain reads emotion fastest from faces. Eyes. Mouth. Reaction. The wider you shoot, the harder your viewer has to work to find the story. Get in. Crop in. Fill the frame.

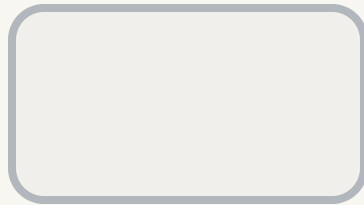

TACTICS 03

Shoot vertical.

TikTok, Reels, Stories, Shorts — every platform that matters lives in 9:16. Horizontal video posted to vertical platforms gets cropped, ignored, or stuffed into a tiny postage stamp. The only exception is YouTube proper — the long-form, full-screen kind. Everywhere else, turn the phone.

TACTICS 03

Lighting in thirty seconds.

- Light should be on the face, not behind it. If the brightest thing in the frame is the window, your subject becomes a silhouette.

- Shade beats harsh sun. Outdoor at noon? Find a tree, a doorway, a covered porch. Even light, no squint.

- Indoors, face the window. Free, flattering, professional-looking light. The window is your softbox.

- If the room is dark, find a different room. Phones hate darkness — the footage gets grainy and muddy. Move.

TACTICS 04

Audio is the biggest difference between amateur and pro.

- Get close to your subject. Phone mic at arm's length picks up everything; phone mic at three feet picks up the room.

- Find a quiet spot. If you can hear the AC vent or a basketball bouncing, your viewer will too. Step into a hallway.

- Wait for the noise to pass. Whistle, plane, slammed door — pause five seconds, then go again. Free fix.

- Capture the room. Ten seconds of background sound — kids laughing, ball bouncing — makes any edit feel alive.

TACTICS 05 · PAIR WITH B-ROLL

Let them tell. Then show what they're describing.

A talking-head video by itself is a podcast on screen. The same testimonial, intercut with footage of the actual thing they're talking about, becomes a story.

- Parent says "my daughter is reading two grade levels above where she was last year" → cut to her reading.

- Coach says "this team didn't know each other in September" → cut to a high-five, a huddle, a celebration.

- Volunteer says "I come here twice a week" → cut to her walking in the door, hugging a kid.

Capture more than you think you need.

Then post way less.

— TACTICS 08 · TEN ANGLES BEAT ONE. THE BEST FOUR SECONDS BEAT THE WHOLE FORTY.

Before you post — would I stop scrolling for this?

— THE THUMB-STOP TEST · FILTER #2

RECAP

Everything you need, on one card.

01

STRATEGY

Why post this?

E · E · I — at least one

For one specific person

One thumb-stopping moment

02

TACTICS

How to capture?

Close. Vertical. Lit. Audible.

Capture more than you think you need

Post way less than you captured

03

FILTERS

Worth posting?

Did it stop me?

Would it stop a stranger who doesn't know this kid?

If yes to both → post.

A quick gallery of "don't."

Spot any of these in your own posts? Take it down and try again.

The press release

"We had a great day at the club!" — posed group + logo wall = no story.

The backlit selfie

Window brighter than the face. Subject becomes a silhouette.

Wide shot — most of the frame is empty

The super-wide

80% of the frame is empty room. The viewer has to hunt for the story.

0:00 — 0:03 — nothing happens

The slow start

Nothing interesting in the first two seconds. The thumb is already gone.

[... muffled ...]

The far-away mic

Subject six feet from the phone. Nobody can hear what they said.

Underlit room — grainy footage

The dim room

Phones hate low light. Footage looks grainy and tired. Move toward a window.

AFTER YOU CAPTURE · EDIT

Make every second count.

Attention spans are short. Two moves in the edit:

01

Cut the wind-up.

Don't open with "ok..." or "and we're rolling..."
Trim until the video starts on the strongest second. If they speak, start when they start.
Get in. Get out. Get scrolled-past less.

02

One CTA per post.

Sign up. Share. Donate. Tag a friend. Pick one — don't ask for everything at once. A post with three asks gets zero of them.

YOUR HOMEWORK

Three moments. One week.

- Capture three moments this week using the four signals — a first, a surprise, a contrast, or a real relationship.

- Save three posts that stop your thumb. Ask yourself: was it entertaining, educational, inspirational — or all three?

- Post one of your three moments. Vertical. Captions. Strongest two seconds first. See what happens.

THE BIGGER PICTURE

These skills don't stay at the club.

Everything you learned today works at your kid's birthday party, your own business, your church newsletter, your family. You're not just a BGC staffer with a phone anymore. You're a storyteller.

Now — questions?
